Cash trade in days off common: Cathay staff
JO BOWMAN
SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST, p3
December 22, 1999

Cathay Pacific flight attendants have been buying and selling days off on the company's computer system for months, staff disclosed yesterday.

The news comes days after stewardess Chan Suk-ye, 33, killed herself after being caught by Cathay trying to sell her Christmas holidays over the Internet.

Workers said cabin crew had long been offering cash for shift changes on a system called eSwap that Cathay set up for them to switch flights and days off.

A senior flight attendant, who has been with Cathay more than five years, said that while friends would often swap shifts for nothing, payment was required in most other cases.

"A day off costs about $500, but for Christmas, New Year and Chinese New Year, it's more," she said.

"Normally, we offer money because days off are very precious to us - some people sell and some people buy. We leave down our phone numbers (so colleagues can get in touch)."

Chan's body was found last Tuesday in the bedroom of her Mongkok flat, which she had sealed before burning a basin of charcoal.

She had been questioned by Cathay over an Internet advertisement offering Christmas and New Year days off for $5,000, and confessed after being played a tape of a phone call in which she again made the offer.

A Cathay pilot said: "It was happening right there on the company's internal web site - they've known about it for ages."

Cathay insiders say many of the messages on eSwap, which had sought or offered payment for shift switches, had been removed from the site in recent days.

A Cathay Pacific spokeswoman said eSwap was set up as a service for workers "and we hope the staff will respect it".

"It's the company's policy that the swap-duty system should not be abused for financial advantage and this policy has been communicated to staff," she said.

"We do, from time to time, monitor the system to make sure that no staff are abusing it, but there's no way the company can guarantee to stop the abuses 100 per cent."
